Commentary:

1. The choice of Bergerette savoyenne as the first piece is deliberate. It allows Petrucci to use the capital letter B which had graced the opening of Canti B, thus following the pattern of using the A of Odhecaton A for the first piece of Spinacino's first volume.
2. The pattern of corrections suggests, as it did for Spinacino's first book, that the lutenist himself was responsible for reading and correcting the musical text.
3. In contrast with the practice in the first book, all the recercars have attributions to Spinacino himself. This seems more likely to reflect the presence of Spinacino in the shop than it does the possibility of a different lutenist composing works in Book 1.
